Please add the exercise on randomization inference among the compulsory problem sets, that will be extremely helpful. More hands-on study and exercises, similar to the first part of the serie (Applied I), would definitely be helpful.

Very intriguing course with a lot of mind opening material. Only complaint is on the administrative side of the course. On more than one occasion there were last minute changes/updates to the schedule or a lecture/session had not been officially scheduled until last minute, which of course makes planning of other activities trickier. I'm guessing this partially has to do with the fact that there were several lecturers while it was unclear who had the main responsibility for the course. Nevertheless, these issues only lead to minor discomfort and are also easily adjusted for next year. Overall therefore I'm very satisfied with the course and I feel I've gained several new important tools for doing good research in the future.
